Judge Moore's Brooklyn Court of Sessions

Judge Moore's Brooklyn Court of Sessions was crowded this morning, when Adam Haus, Peter Schultz and Mary Wertheimer were arraigned to plead to a charge of murder in the first degree for the brutal killing of Mary's three-months-old baby.

The Grand Jury came into court shortly after 10 o'click and presented a batch of indictinents. Among them were bills against the three conspirators.

When the prisoners were called upon to plead they looked at each other, but said nothing. Judge Moore directed the clark to enter pleas of not guilty for them. When asked if they had employed counsel they replied that they had and, and that they were asked if they had employed counsel they replied that they had not, and that they were without money. The court told then he would assign lawyers to conduct their describes. They were then remanded to Kaymond Street Jall.
